Delete Files from USB Flash Drives Like other disk drives, USB flash drives can hold any number of files. They can even hold your entire music library, and users may not always want to keep them in their computers for backups or compatibility reasons. Consequently, it's important to delete unwanted files from USB drives to free up storage space. OneDrive You can use OneDrive to free up storage space from OneDrive by uninstalling OneDrive from your system. However, this option will not work on OneDrive folders. In addition, OneDrive will not let users delete files in files that have not been opened yet. To free up more storage on OneDrive, users will need to either unmount the drive by right-clicking on it and selecting the unmount option, or reformat the drive as a "Read Only" drive. Laptop drive OneDrive will only let users delete files in USB drives. You can easily free up some extra storage on USB drives by disconnecting them from your laptop and then reformatting them. The format option will also delete files from your USB drives. However, if you have important files on your USB drive, it's best to back them up or move them to a different storage device. External hard drive OneDrive will let you delete files in external hard drives. You can also use this option to delete files from USB drives. Before using this option, however, users need to make sure they have backed up the data on the external drive. You can simply plug the external hard drive into a computer and copy files from the external hard drive. If you have a large data backup, it might take longer than you expect to copy files from an external hard drive to your system. 1. KeyCommand macro: Use to control the keyboard shortcuts for macros. 2. Key/Target: We can set the Key target or Target to hit. 3. Key event: We can set the Keyboard event to key strokes. 4. Key delay: How long to delay before the macro, the key hits a target. 5. Command: To set a command to run after the key hits the target. How to Use: 1. KeyCommand Macro -> On the ribbon, click the key you want to use as a Macro (default is "F10"). -> On the Macro tab, click the "Create a macro..." button. -> Write the commands. The Macros begin with a "macro:" prefix. -> Click on the "OK" button and then save it with a new name. 2. Key/Target -> If you want to set a Target, put the "key" and the "target" together. For example, I want to set F10 to open the "File menu" (Target). -> When the macro is saved, you can see this Target on the Macro tab of the ribbon. If you want to set the same Target again, click on the "Rename Target" button and edit it. 3. Key event -> Key event is to set a keystroke as a command in the Macro. This keystroke will be executed when the target is hit. For example, I want to press Ctrl+M to say "Insert Clip" in a document. -> The command can contain any command. For example, I can say, "I want to save the document." -> The command can contain any command, and it will be executed after the target is hit. 4. Key delay -> The delay to execute the command when the key is hit. For example, if the keystroke is Ctrl+M, then you can set it as a command to run for 3 seconds after the target is hit. 5. Command -> If you want to run a command when the key is hit, you can insert it in the macro. For example, I want to close the active document with Ctrl+W. -> You can only set a command in the Macro. -> When the key is hit, it will execute the command. 6. Macro Recorder -> To record the macro, click the "Start Recording" button. -> When you finished recording, click the "Stop 77a5ca646e"

SoftSpire PDF Attachment Extractor - Processing Files in Single WindowIn early November, I made a trip to the Atlanta library to look for an old novel by my aunt. As an avid reader, I'd hoped she'd written at least one. I also wanted to see if she'd ever come across my brother. She'd moved from Canada to the U.S. in her mid-40s, when he was seven, and they'd kept in touch until she died. All of a sudden, we were on the same plane, or rather, on the same page. When I found the journal, my heart leaped, for it was filled with letters from her and an old photo of my brother, the children of both of us. Her notes on our early lives were a lot like letters I'd written to my own mother, the two of us sharing more of ourselves than we knew. We'd grown up in West London, England, in the 1980s. I was a teen and my brother was a toddler. There were letters about their early years with mom, and then their own children were born. There were stories of their first jobs in London, and about their relationships with one another. We'd stayed in touch sporadically over the years, but we'd both moved on. I met someone else. He fell in love and got married. The photos of my brother had been in a little black book, and, as I flipped through it, I noticed they were part of a family album. They showed a young family. He'd also been a baby with big blue eyes and full lips. I was struck by his likeness to his aunt, with her chestnut hair and brown eyes. I wondered if he'd have my blue eyes or my mother's green. We'd both married and moved on. How often does that happen? One of us would leave, and the other was left behind. I'm in Toronto, now, and he's in the U.S. Our kids are grown up and living on their own. We
