Q: SQL count duplicates even when NULL values are present Trying to count instances of duplicates in a column even though the count occurs in a table with NULL data. Consider the following SQL: select count() from (select 1 count() from t1 union select 1 count() from t2 union select 1 count() from t3) Which returns: count 3 Now what I would like to achieve is: count 4 Which is when all three tables have a count of 1. Does anyone know how this can be achieved please? Many thanks in advance. A: It's not even necessary to count the unioned rows at all. You could just count the distinct values of your table select count(distinct count) from (select 1 count union all select 2 count union all select 3 count) t John Fisher, 1st Baron Fisher John Fisher, 1st Baron Fisher CB (11 June 1708 – 21 March 1776) was a British politician who served as Leader of the House of Commons from 1751 to 1755 and Chancellor of the Exchequer from 1755 to 1763. What's New In Adobe Photoshop CC 2015?

For as long as I can remember, I have been the type of girl that people would look at and say, "Oh, she's so pretty!" Or they'd ask me out on a date, when they didn't even know me or I couldn't be bothered to go out with them, and then leave disappointed. I had an interest in getting to know people, but due to my mental limitations, I found it very difficult to express an interest in anyone when my insides were telling me 'Go away, go away, go away'. It was a case of, 'I don't think you're that nice; it would be a waste of my time', as I don't do anything I don't want to. I know, it's terrible! After completing counselling and being diagnosed with Asperger's Syndrome, my world was transformed into one in which I was able to find my purpose. I have been running a one-to-one support group for the past two years for young people with Asperger's Syndrome and now I'm at the point of attempting to run a local group. My aim is to promote awareness and understanding of Asperger's and to make people more aware of the support available. I believe that it's when people are aware that they can receive support and assistance that they really can begin to recover. For me, the latter is very important, as I've not had a job in seven years and am relying on the charity of my family and friends to survive. I'd like to change this, as I would really like to get a job and live off my own support. I want to help people with Asperger's Syndrome to get a full life and be independent – and only those who are 'handicapped' by the syndrome will be able to help you in that respect. I believe that you should get your support from people with Asperger's Syndrome as they really do understand what you're going through. I understand that I have Asperger's, but the fact that the understanding people with Asperger's Syndrome can have is not enough. You also need support from those who are able to 'understand' what you're
