M., Senekal O. M., Girard E., and Momeni A. (2018) Relationships between uptake and complications of pneumococcal conjugate vaccine and socio-demographic factors: a cross-sectional study, Community Dentistry and Oral Epidemiology, 46: 309--317. doi: 10.1111/edop.12320.27097623 Introduction {#edop12320-sec-0006} ===== Pneumococcal pneumonia is the most common cause of community-acquired pneumonia, surpassing the contribution of influenza.[1]{#edop12320-bib-0001}{ref-type="ref"} In high-income settings, these infections are among the leading causes of death in children and adults, imposing a significant burden on the healthcare system.[2]{#edop12320-bib-0002}{ref-type="ref"} Due to the highly contagious nature of the disease, many patients have to seek healthcare in emergency rooms, where, in addition to the increased risk of viral transmission, immunocompromised patients are at increased risk for acquiring other pathogens, particularly respiratory viruses.[3]{#edop12320-bib-0003}{ref-type="ref"} Since the licensure of Streptococcus pneumoniae-conjugate vaccines (PCVs) in 2007, vaccine coverage against this pathogen has increased from approximately 20% in previously unvaccinated children to 90% in the age group of 5--8 years in most countries.[4]{#edop12320-bib-0004}{ref-type="ref"}, [5]{#edop12320-bib-0005}{ref-type="ref"} PCVs are highly effective in preventing invasive pneumococcal infections, especially in children.[6]{#edop12320-bib-0006}{ref-type="ref"} However, these vaccines are not 100% effective, and their efficacy appears to depend on non-antibody-mediated factors, such as expression of important cell-adhesion molecules on the surface of pneumococci.7{ref-type="ref"} The introduction of PCVs also led to the development of escape mutants that are not covered by the vaccine.8{ref-type="ref"} Several studies have examined to
