Tumor-associated macrophages inhibit NK-mediated tumor cell cytotoxicity in a cytokine-dependent manner. Polymorphonuclear leukocytes (PMN) and tumor-associated macrophages (TAM) are thought to have significant roles in the tumor microenvironment. Tumor-associated macrophages have been shown to inhibit both innate and adaptive immune functions, including NK-mediated tumor cell cytotoxicity. However, the mechanisms underlying this inhibition have not been fully elucidated. In this study, we examined the effects of human tumor-associated macrophages on NK-mediated tumor cell cytotoxicity in vitro. We used a cytokine inhibition assay and found that conditioned medium from co-cultures of human TAM and NK inhibited NK-mediated tumor cell lysis in both primary and secondary targets. In contrast, polyclonally stimulated and monocyte-derived macrophages did not affect NK-mediated tumor cell lysis. Cytokine inhibition was not mediated by IL-10, IL-1 beta, IL-2, IL-6, or TNF-alpha. Human recombinant IL-1 alpha, TNF-alpha, and IL-2 alone did not inhibit NK-mediated tumor cell lysis. However, these cytokines can inhibit the inhibitory effect of primary macrophages
