The effects of dietary calcium, magnesium, and inorganic phosphate on the concentrations of amino acids in the urine of horses were investigated. In a study involving healthy horses, there were no significant differences in the concentrations of amino acids in urine between treatment groups fed diets containing 0 or 26 g/1000 kcal of dietary calcium. In a dietary magnesium-supplementation study, there were no significant changes in the urinary concentrations of essential amino acids in horses receiving a diet supplemented with 250 or 500 mg of dietary magnesium per 1000 kcal. In a study involving horses with acute renal failure, horses fed a diet supplemented with 150 mg of dietary magnesium per 1000 kcal had significantly greater concentrations of urinary amino acids than did those fed a diet supplemented with 0 mg of dietary magnesium. There were no significant differences in the concentrations of urinary amino acids in horses fed diets containing 0 or 5 g of dietary inorganic phosphate per 1000 kcal. These results suggest that calcium and magnesium have no direct effect on the urinary concentrations of amino acids in healthy horses and that there is no significant relationship between dietary inorganic phosphate and urinary concentrations of amino acids in acute renal failure.The Bet-at-home betting software application is a product designed to protect bettors from being scam and fraud at online bookmakers. "ITV were told about the old spa in Congleton. It won't have the same atmosphere as Love Island, but viewers really love the fantasy. "Now with filming for this year's grand final beginning to take place there, it'll be a much more comfortable place to film it. There's no way of knowing how popular this will be, but given there's only one old spa in the country, they might be onto a winner. "Plus, who doesn't love a hot bath for the day and a nice meal afterwards?" The news follows Olivia Jesty's departure from the show after this week's Love Island 2019 episode. Olivia, 19, was dumped by Arran Knight and spent the night with Jack Fowler. (Image: E+) After the first night
