Q: What is the default size of database storage on a web server? My web application is using PostgreSQL for storage and I wonder what is the default value for the database size. So for example I have a web server with space left of 1GB, and I do not know what is the default size of my web app's storage, if I create a database using psql (command line interface), what will be the size? A: According to the official documentation, the initial size of the data directory that PostgreSQL uses is 1MB. So if you start the service, there's nothing but at least 1MB of disk space free. The filesystem might be larger, but at least 1MB is available by default. You can also check the size using psql by running: SELECT data_directory; Changing the data directory size is a somewhat involved process. This tutorial from PgBadger explains the process and includes a sample configuration file. A: Since the original post is deleted, I'll make the best guess: If it was your own software, and you believe the issue was caused by the crack, then deleting the offending line from your software's code is an appropriate, reasonable, and effective solution. crack (noun) verb [with object] cause something to be broken or damaged, usually by breaking or removing a part. If that were the case, yes, deleting the lines should fix the issue you experienced. Deleting the code that you posted in the question is not an appropriate solution. It could have something to do with the fact that you posted links to Chinese websites in your original question. It could be your software's installation files. It could be a translation or resynch issue with your translation software. It could be any number of other things. None of these items should ever be deleted from a question. Instead, work to track down the issue. If you believe your installation files are not the problem, then provide a link to your installation files. The Roman Catholic Church is considering a proposal to allow women to become deacons, the lowest rank in the church hierarchy, according to a report by the Associated Press. The announcement on the initiative was made by Cardinal Raymond Burke, the head of the Vatican's highest court, the highest court in the Roman Catholic Church. The letter in which he wrote the announcement was published by the Vatican-owned newspaper, L'Osservatore Romano. "Following a declaration of the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith regarding the ordination to the presbyterate of women, the Pope has decided to submit the matter to consultation of the fathers of the four general congregations, in order to ascertain whether the law of the Church is to be changed," Burke wrote in the announcement. The announcement makes no indication of how the church might decide to move forward. The Vatican has been looking to engage in dialogue with feminists and other groups outside of the church for many years, a source close to the Vatican told The Huffington Post in February. The Vatican's development also comes just a few months after Pope Francis addressed the issue of women and power in a letter sent out to Italian bishops. In the letter, Francis told the bishops that the church must begin to examine the influence that patriarchy wields over women and the way institutions can be corrupted by "spiritual disorders" in which women are e79caf774b

What if something happens to you, or you move from one state to another, where you don't know what to do for a start? Do you need to pack up your belongings, and also your money and documents, and move to a new address? If you are moving to a new place, do you need to get all the necessary information to the new address? Once you have all the info, do you have enough time to make the move and set up the new place? This is the reason why it is important to have an address record in a reliable company. Not only you can get all the important information, you also can look for a house and a land that would suit your interest. You can even have a look at pictures and plans in order to see what kind of house you're interested in. Once you have the address record, you can settle down anywhere in the country. You do not have to stress too much about time and distance.Q: Qr code inside menu in android app I have an Android app and I want to add a QR code inside a menu. I have a List which has different subtypes of Observation. Observation.cs: class Observation { public string ID { get; set; } public DateTime Timestamp { get; set; } } My list of Observations is created by serializing a Json file. As you can see the Timestamp and the ID are stored in different properties in Json, even though the values are of the same type. Example of my List: List listObservation = new List(); So my question is, how can I change the properties of the objects within the List in a specific order? For example, I would want to change the ID property before I change the Timestamp property. A: You can use an array to do this. Array.Sort(ObservationArray, ObservationComparer); Change the function as per your sorting priorities. if (priority == 0) { if (timestamp
