Safety and efficacy of the new HMG-CoA reductase inhibitors simvastatin and atorvastatin: a review of current literature. In recent years, numerous studies have demonstrated the efficacy of cholesterol-lowering therapy, the beneficial effects on atherosclerotic cardiovascular disease, and even the reduction of mortality in patients with coronary heart disease (CHD). Different classes of cholesterol-lowering drugs are available for the treatment of hypercholesterolemia, including the 3-hydroxy-3-methylglutaryl coenzyme A (HMG-CoA) reductase inhibitors. These agents exert their primary cholesterol-lowering effect by inhibiting the conversion of HMG-CoA to mevalonate. Mevalonate is an intermediate step in the cholesterol synthesis pathway and the cholesterol precursor of several lipoprotein-associated compounds. In vitro, simvastatin and atorvastatin inhibit HMG-CoA reductase activity with similar potency, which translates into approximately equivalent reductions in total and LDL cholesterol. Reductions in total and LDL cholesterol typically reach up to 50% at the highest doses. Both drugs are highly effective in lowering total cholesterol and LDL cholesterol, which has been observed in most clinical trials, although atorvastatin has been shown to produce greater lipid reductions in most clinical trials. Results of the few placebo-controlled trials that have been conducted have consistently shown atorvastatin to be more efficacious than simvastatin. The 4-year open-label Atorvastatin Diabetes and Lipid Lowering Study (A-to-Z) has also demonstrated atorvastatin to be more effective than pravastatin in the treatment of patients with type 2 diabetes mellitus and dyslipidemia. The most notable difference observed in the A-to-Z study compared with other clinical trials was in the proportion of patients who achieved a low-density lipoprotein cholesterol (LDL) level less than 100 mg/dL. About 30% of the patients treated with atorvastatin reached this goal, whereas only 8% of the patients treated with pravastatin reached this goal. Simvastatin, however, was found to be equally effective as atorvastatin in achieving LDL cholesterol reductions, as well as elevations in HDL cholesterol.

Technical Field The present invention relates to a pressure sensor for detecting the pressure of a pressure detecting medium or the like. 2. Related Art JP-A-8-202171 discloses a pressure sensor which detects the pressure of the pressure detecting medium based on the change in piezoelectric constant of a piezoelectric element (piezoelectric ceramics). The pressure sensor disclosed in JP-A-8-202171 is an ultrasonic pressure sensor which detects the pressure of the pressure detecting medium based on the change in ultrasonic propagation time. The sensor includes a piezoelectric element which vibrates upon application of pressure to detect the ultrasonic signal sent to the piezoelectric element. Recently, with the increasing awareness of the environment, such as the global warming, the energy-saving has been highly required. For example, there is a demand for the reduction in the amount
